

The annoyance of the constant chatter of cell phone users in public places would be extreme if current rules banning cell phone use on board commercial flights were changed to allow such use. Imagine being a captive audience to multiple cell phone users for any duration and you can quickly discern what a nuisance it would be. Presumably the technology issue is being resolved whereby cell phone use no longer presents any danger to the operation of the aircraft, but as an opinion only, I don't feel that this is sufficient reason to allow a situation to exist of which I would not like to be exposed to; that being the consistent noise pollution caused by unnecessary and annoying cell phone use.
